Before opening, Aby Rosen's Landmark Rooms at the Seagram Building are already hosting haute bashes for the art and social sets.

The Art Production Fund honored artistic duo Elmgreen & Dragset and designer Miuccia Prada on Monday, at the eatery that once housed the Four Seasons restaurant. (Michael Elmgreen and Ingar Dragset are behind the famed "Prada Marfa" piece near Marfa, Texas — a replica of a sleek Prada boutique in the middle of nowhere.)

At the dinner, the LA Dance Project performed in the restaurant's famed pool for guests, who included Huma Abedin, Nicky Hilton, Rupert Friend and Aimee Mullins, Donna Karan, John Currin, Francesco Vezzoli, Stacey Bendet and Architectural Digest's Amy Astley.

Coasters by artist Nir Hod had painted-on lines of "cocaine."

Gary Simmons created temporary tattoos of disco balls for the event, which had a "Bright Lights, Big City" theme, was hosted by Casey Fremont, co-hosted by Yvonne Force Villareal and Doreen Remen, and produced by Bettina Prentice.

"Orange Is the New Black" star Alysia Reiner announced that Tuesday would be a "snow day," which prompted the crowd to stay late and sip more Dom.

Rosen was one of the last to leave.

Prada was unable to attend in person.
